We Really Should Think of a Clever Headline

As this is started it is late December, 1994, and already things are looking great as we go into what may be the final year of the Clinton administration. All kinds of interesting developments have taken place which make me believe that what goes around does, indeed, come around.

An example –

A U.S. District Judge in Little Rock, Susan Wright, has made a ruling in the Paula Jones sexual harassment case against the Prez. You will recall that this is the case where it is alleged that Wee Willie invited Jones to inspect his wee willie in a hotel room. The lawyer for Clinton has maintained that he cannot be held liable for such pre-Prez actions until he is out of office, as such actions would interfere with his duties as President. Basically he has claimed immunity while raising money for his "non-profit" Legal Defense Fund. Judge Wright said she found nothing in the Constitution that would provide immunity from claims brought against a president for alleged illegalities committed prior to taking office.

But, noting that Jones did not file her lawsuit until two days before the statute of limitations ran out, the judge said there was clearly no urgency to the case so it would not go to trial until after Clinton leaves office. In the meantime, dear folks, there can be depositions and normal discovery processes performed. Imagine ... here will be a current president being grilled by lawyers in a sexual harassment suit wherein it is stated that he has certain identifying marks that only someone who had seen that portion of his brain would be able to recognize. Wow, this could be greater than Melrose Place or the British Royalty scandals! What a hoot!

I wonder what they are going to do with all that Legal Defense money, anyway. It is probably already in the 1996 campaign coffers since Clinton has announced that he will positively be running for re-election. As we all know, we can take his enthusiastic declarations to the bank as he has never been known to tell a lie.

Taking this scenario in a more serious direction, it also means that there is precedent for Mr. Clinton to be forced to appear before Congress to testify in the Whitewater – Resolution Trust – Madison Guaranty – Don Tyson investigations. If he commits perjury he will be performing an impeachable act. As will Hillary. Think about the implications as you watch the upcoming Ad Nauseam Hearings.

Let us also look at the number of high-level people in the Clinton administration who have resigned, or have been forced to resign.

1) Webb Hubbell, the former associate attorney general and number three official in the Justice Department. Mr. Hubbell quit the government in order to fight charges that he had overbilled the government while a partner in the infamous Rose law firm and subsequently pleaded guilty to such charges. He is singing like a bird to the independent Whitewater prosecutor, Kenneth Starr, and will surely perform the same service for the investigations into Don Tyson and the Department of Agriculture, the Resolution Trust Corporation, and others. Mr.

Hubbell's assistance in these matters may prove to be hazardous to the political health of the HillyBillys as he is one of the few persons (still living) who was with them from their political genesis, and in a position of both intimacy and trust. Part of the wheat and not the chaff, so to speak.

Hubbell was part and parcel of both the pre-inaugural and post-inaugural activities of the Clintons'. He was a key player in the money raising/skimming activities of the Clinton campaign via "loans" made through Madison Guaranty, et al. Ironically, he also wrote the Ethics guidelines for lawyers in the State of Arkansas. Perhaps he and others in the Clinton circle should have studied them a tad more carefully. After the presidential election he was the individual at the Justice Department who was the administration's "contact" man during the Travel Office fiasco, Vince Foster's alleged suicide, and the investigation into improper contacts between the White House and Treasury Department during the Whitewater inquiries. Not bad, bag man to contact man.

This guy knows everything and is even still alive to talk to investigators.

2) Joycelyn Elders, one of my personal favorites, was fired after she stated that children in school should be taught how to be wankers. She must think American kids are backward or something. Jeez, don't they learn anything anymore? Personally I think the incident was a setup so the administration would have an excuse to finally get rid of her while our Fearless Feeler tries to convince people that he is misunderstood and, at heart, is a middle-of-the-road moderate. Or anything else that will keep him in office. We are going to miss Joycelyn immensely. She represents the best of how affirmative action policies have encouraged our "best and brightest" to become physicians, lawyers, and other professionals. I think she would be a good Drug Czar or Secretary of Education.

3) Lloyd Bentsen, the former Secretary of the Treasury, resigned to go home to Texas, but will continue to advise the White House. I hope so as Mr. Bentsen has been one of the few consistent class acts in this administration. Makes you wonder what he knows, why he left so soon, and if he will be invited to speak before the Ad Nauseam Hearings.

4) Dee Dee Myers has resigned as press secretary. She was also a holdover from the Clinton campaign. Her ability to keep a straight face, and appear truthful and sincere, is admirable. Her memoirs could be a beaut!

5) Roger Altman and Jean Hanson, deputy Treasury Secretary and Treasury general counsel, respectively, both resigned after giving less than truthful testimony at the inquiries into failed Arkansas S&L's. I am sure they will be heard from again.

6) Bernard Nussbaum, former chief White House Counsel, resigned under pressure last March. Interestingly, he had worked with Hillary Rod-him Clinton on the staff of the Watergate hearings. Now he is up to his armpits in Whitewatergate. Nussbaum has also been involved in the Vincent Foster suicide investigation.

This investigation will go down in history as perhaps a massive high-level cover-up or, at best, incompetent. When Park Police went to the White House to search Foster's office on July 21, 1993, they were barred from entry and told to make an appointment and come back the next day. Then it was announced that the "point of contact" would be the Justice Department. On July 22, 1993, Nussbaum conducted the official search of the office in the presence of FBI agents and Justice Department lawyers. Nussbaum removed material the investigators were not allowed to see! Kinda like a coyote burying chicken feathers after a raid on the coop.

In the meantime the Park Police investigators were made to wait and were again denied entry to the office even though it was technically their investigation. The death purportedly occurred in their jurisdiction. Nussbaum sorted through the Foster papers, and did not provide copies to the Park Police investigators, but merely discussed the files' contents. Anyone want to guess who the "contact man" was at Justice? Yep, Webb Hubbell.

Then, nine days after the suicide, a "note" supposedly written by Foster was discovered, and provided to the police and media. The torn-up note was found in Foster's briefcase, which had been searched by Nussbaum. The discovery was not announced until quite a period of time had elapsed. After the investigation was "concluded" in December, 1993, it was discovered that papers had been removed from Foster's office on the night of his death by Nussbaum, Patsy Thomasson, special assistant to the President, and the First Lady's Chief of Staff, Margaret Williams. The reason given was they were removing documents that may have been related to national security and were looking for a suicide note. HEE, HEE – RIGHT! We are talking about people who were unable to get national security clearances looking for national security documents? Lift your feet, it's gettin' deep.

I would hazard a guess that Nussbaum, et al, will be questioned further in this matter as there are too many smelly carcasses floating around, and the Foster case is definitely not over.

There have been many others who have resigned – Les Aspin, Mack McLarty, David Watkins. and Mike Espy. These are the live ones anyway. There will be a lot more. Rats do leave sinking ships, dominos do fall.

So, for your edification and perusal I will present my New Year's prediction, to wit:

The Clinton Presidency is finished and I would not be surprised to see Wee Willie resign before the end of 1995. Further, his demise will result from skulduggery from within the Democratic party, not the Republicans. The reasons are as follows:

The financial, political, and personal frauds perpetrated by the Wee Wanker and his merry band of assorted liars, thieves, and Socialists are now known to a large part of the populace. Jest cain't stop them high-falutin' fax machines and electronic mail, don't ya see. All of the sins of the past are coming home to roost, and the good ol' boys and girls are busily flapping their collective jowls in the hope that they are able to survive outside of prison.

Those who have rolled over include Hubbell, Hale, and some minor Whitewater/Madison Guaranty/Arkansas Development/Clinton Administration personnel. Rollers-to-be are Dee Dee Myers, Patsy Tommasson, Betsy Wright, and George Stepinfechit-opolous. The BIG roller will be the ruler, the Arkansas Dragon Lady herself, Hillary "Rod-him" Clinton. The ultimate "rollee" is Willee.

Regardless of Hilary's desires or pretensions she is not an elected official nor is she a government employee. Therefore she is subject to both subpoena AND indictment. She may think she is President but it was the Wee One we elected, not her. If you recall, an argument was presented by El Presidente's attorneys that he could not be held to account for transgressions committed prior to his election as President. This argument is null and void.

It can also be recalled that all along this Toothsome Twosome has maintained that they are "jest po' kids" from Hope, Arkansas. Further, the Prez has consistently said that Hillary was the one who handled all the financial affairs of the couple, while he has handled all the other affairs, and he "jest don' know nuthin 'bout nuthin'". What a crock!

Now, at what point does Hillary say "enough" and refuse to take the heat all on her own? Remember, this is a woman who is equally as ambitious, graspy, greedy and avaricious as he is. The only difference between the two is that he is much better at dissembling, due to his pathological personality. She gets mad and shows it in public. Think about it, folks.

If my analysis is wrong it will only be because the Republicans make it so, not the Democrats. If the Republicans are truly ideologically committed to changing the moral and ethical aura of political leadership, they will show that no one person or group in government is above the law, Conservative or Liberal, Republican or Democrat. If they fail in this effort there will be a strong third-party movement in this country that may prove disruptive. It could get interesting.

A friend of mine in Boston has provided an interesting idea. Why not get rid of the office of Vice-President? We would simply have couples in a co-Presidency just like the HillyBillys. Think about it –

We could have Barney Frank and Gary Studds. They would probably fight all the time about who's on top. So, how about Sonny Bono and Cher? Instead of Hail to the Chiefs, we could play "I Got (Had) You, Babe". Or Jane Fonda and Ted Turner singing "Home on the Range", Lorena and John Bobbit, where she plays the Red Queen (Alice in Wonderland) singing "Off with Your Other Head". Last, we could have Michael Jackson and Lisa Marie Presley singing their hymns to hermaphroditic earthworms.

The same Bostonian also sent me a self-help book for Christmas called "The Superior Person's Book of Words" It is a cute little tome that has all kinds of "uppity" words which can be used to make a person's verbal positions unintelligible, therefore valid. You, dear readers, are going to be the beneficiaries of my enlightenment in each issue of the Chickenslick Chronicles, thereby becoming paronomasiac groupies.

Paronomasiac refers to punsters or anyone who has a penchant for playing with words. There are 500 of these little obscure goodies in this book and here is the first one for a brand New Year:

ABECEDARIAN (I) arranged in alphabetical order (i.e., ABECEDARIAN INSULT ) as follows:

"Sir, you are an apogenous, bovaristic, coprolalial, dasypgal, excerebose, facinorous, gnathonic, hircine, ithyphallic, jumentous, kyphotic, labrose, mephitic, napi-form, oligophrenial, papuliferous, quisquilian, rebarbative, saponaceous, thersitital, unguinous, ventripotent, wlatsome, xylocephalous, yirning zoophyte."

Translation: "Sir, you are an impotent, conceited, obscene, hairy-buttocked, brainless, wicked, toadying, goatish, indecent, stable-smelling, hunch-backed, thick-lipped, stinking, turnip-shaped, feeble-minded, pimply, foul-mouthed, greasy, gluttonous, loathsome, wooden-headed, whining, extremely low form of animal life."

Put that in your Word Perfect 5.0 Spell Checker! It sounds vaguely familiar. Isn't that what Paula Jones said to Bill Clinton?

HELP FOR THE WHITE HOUSE WILLYS

El Jefe Grande seems to have a tough time hanging on to press secretaries, Cabinet officers, senior administrators and lawyers. Look at all the ones who have left – Myers, Bentsen, Espy, Elders, Hubbell, Altman, Foster, Gergen, Sessions, Nussbaum, et al. Can anyone tell me if Christopher is still there? The last I heard he was posing for a photo ad to get tourists to go to Egypt to look at the mummies.

*If the Republicans are truly ideologically
committed to changing the moral and ethical aura
of political leadership,
they will show that
no one person or group
in government
is above the law,
Conservative
or Liberal, Republican or Democrat*

Anyway, in light of the fact that nobody seems to want to stick around and a whole bunch of people will also be fleeing the sinking ship, I think that the President needs to revamp his whole administration. So why don't we all pitch in and help? Here are my suggestions for both the new and old positions, and who would be the best people for them –

Secretary of State – The obvious choice is Jimmy Carter. He badly wants the Nobel Peace Prize to make up for his presidency being superseded by Clinton's as the most incompetent administration of the past 100 years. He certainly does not want to play Avis to Clinton's Hertz. This is the person who gave us Andrew Young as Ambassador to the UN and the Iranian hostage debacle. He also stated that Kim il Sung of North Korea had "a big heart". Must have been the kiss of death, as Sung died 10 days later.

Secretary of Transportation – Since this department is in charge of roads and bridges, the best person for this job has to be Ted Kennedy. Now a lot of people, including yours truly, have made fun of Ted for his poor Red Cross Lifesaving skills, his drinking and womanizing problems, and his porky countenance. I think it is time to be fair to Ted. We love you Teddie and really appreciate everything you have done for the producing, tax-paying, middle-class in America.

Veterans Administration – Jane Fonda has promised to set up a toll-free line for vets. Just call 1-800-HANOI. She and Willy are virtually the same ideologically, just different genders. We are just surrounded by patriotic Americans who never worked against their country in times of trouble.

Drug Enforcement Administration – The one, the only, Marion Barry. The man who cares so much for his constituents that he is constantly blowing his nose. Must be those cathartic feelings for the plight of his fellow man. How would any of us feel, having to preside over one of the few third-world nations left in the United States?

Secretary of Education – This is a position that just cries out for Joycelyn Elders. Wee Willy wants it for her as she has just rented a new condom (oops, condo!) in Washington, and wants to stay next to her old friends from Arkansas. What better person to keep pushing the dumbing down of education in the U.S.? We need a real expert and she is the best there is.

Surgeon General – There has to be some place for Jack Kervorkian in this administration! With all those Arkansas deaths going on out there “ol Doctor Death” is a natural. If anyone can stage a suicide to really look like a suicide it’s old Jack.

Secretary of Immigration – Maybe we can persuade Aristide to come back. If not, how about Pete Wilson?

Attorney General – This assumes that Janet Reno will ever be indicted for her actions at the Holocaust in Waco. Why hasn’t the news media pointed out that more Americans were killed there than in most of the military conflicts we have been in overseas recently? Hmmmm...? Anyway, how about Anita Hill in the name of sexual harmony and racial diversity? I like it!

Secretary of Defense – Pat Buchanan. Why is it all the former Vietnam-era noncombatants always want to nuke somebody? Well, Pat, here is your chance. So many targets, so little time.

Secretary of Agriculture – Why not go right to the top and nominate Don Tyson? Instead the administration has nominated Dan Glickman, one of the Congressmen who was defeated in the past elections. Glickman is apparently one of the few officials in this administration who is knowledgeable about the issues he will be addressing. What a different and novel approach to governing. He may even be competent!

Secretary of Treasury – This position has so many competent potential nominees that it is a tossup between Robert Byrd, Senator from West Virginia, and Dan Rostenkowski, formerly a Congressman from Chicago. These guys will put their stamps of approval on anything.

CIA – Ross Perot. No doubt about it. Any guy who can stop a Black Panther hit team with a dog has got to be awesome. He can spend most of his time trying to dig up nefarious goodies on the Bush family. Another plus is that he really shines philosophically as a megalomaniac would-be dictator. This position would be perfect for ol’ Ross.

We also badly need a new Department of Morality and Ethics, and the best choice would be Jim Bakker. He is now out of jail, having served his time for fraud, loves the ladies, is a smooth and persuasive speaker, and needs a job. On second thought maybe he should be President.

COMING UP, RALPH

The next issues of the Chickenslick Chronicles will concentrate on immigration – legal and otherwise – and welfare. These issues will be mingled with the effects of the rising Information Age on American culture and economics. It is obvious that the world as a whole is breaking down into pockets of “haves” versus “have-nots” and the events of the past few years will pale in comparison to events that will be encountered in the next five years.

The policies that dominated American life for the past thirty years will no longer be dominant; they can’t be, or we will all suffer terribly. As an example of failed Socialist thinking, let me provide you with Jesse Jackson’s reasons for opposing Proposition 187 in California.

He said, on Columbus Day, “Let us not forget that when Columbus landed in America he was considered to be an illegal alien and an undocumented worker.” He went further and said, “The jobs of many minority government employees would be in peril if services to illegal immigrants were slashed.”

Let’s see, using Jesse’s logic, Columbus came to America for the free schools, medical care, food stamps and welfare checks? Let’s see, a combination of an incredibly bloated public bureaucracy with aggressive racial hiring quotas is the only way minorities can find work? Anybody see anything wrong with this knee-jerk Liberal logic?

By the way, in California, the Santa Cruz City Council voted to abolish Columbus Day, renaming it Indigenous People’s Day! Nothing like revisionist history. Same type of thing Joe Stalin, Adolf Hitler and a few other “progressives” used to do. Wonder if Jesse is considered indigenous. Does that mean you get more government money in your pocket? Works for me. That means that the Mexican government who displaced the Flathead Indians will have to pay them for having stolen their lands. Since the Mexican government is so anxious to interfere in our domestic politics it seems appropriate, doesn’t it?

is to wait until a situation has gotten pretty bad,
and then intervene
to make it
worse.*
